Mexican Spies Cannot Longer Molest Americans.

UNITED STATES AGENT SAYS THEY WILL STAY

L. E. Ross, United States secret service operative, declares he is "hossing" the employes of the Mexican federal cars on the American side of the river and searching Americans bound for Jaures, in an effort to find contraband ammunition. What is more, Mr. Ross mays they are going to stay there; that he needs them and that they will continue in service, intimating thereby

Mayor C. E. Kelly and sheriff Peyton J. Edwards, of El Paso, declare as positively that the practice is not going to continue, and there seems a splendid opportunity for a test of authority. Sympathies are all against Mr.
Ross and the operations of his "foreign

Editor El Paso Hersid:

A 16 year old school boy was searched Sunday by a Mexican claiming authority, at the American end of the Stanton street bridge. The boy was justly indigment, being of the decided opinion that Mexican authority did not extend to American soil, but what about the officials—military and civil—that represent the American government, and why was such a thing possible?

"We are going to keep the men at the bridges to watch for ammunition smuggiers." L. E. Hoss, of the department of justice, said about the Mexicans who have been placed at the two bridges. "They are American citizens and are placed there under the direction of the department of justice as informants. They are in the employ of the Mexican government and are paid by that government, but they employ of the Mexican government and are paid by that government, but they are ordered to report to our offics and they walk through the cars and spot men who they know to be ammunition smugglers. The efforts of the ammunition dealers to have the men removed in order to allow smugglers to go to Juarez will not keep us from stopping this practice."

Corporation Inspection.

One of the most important economic measures to be considered by the legislature this session is contained in a bill in course of preparation by the nubile service corporations committee. The bill is designed to assist the corporation commission in its regulative work and its designers are enthusiastic over the belief that it will be of immenue benefit to the public.

Not all the details of the proposed measure have been worked out as yet; but its general scheme provides for the appointment of an inspector, or a board of inspectors, who shall be charged with determining the efficiency of the service provided by any and all corporations rendering service to the public. This inspector, or board, shall be charged with the duty of making reports to the corporation commission, inself the charged with the duty of making reports to the corporation commission. ports to the corporation commission, which shall, thereupon, classify all these companies on the basis of quality of service rendered by them. At about 11:30 Monday night, Mr.
Long called upon Gen. Salazar at his rooms in the Grand Central hotel and urged that Fountain's sentence be stayed for 24 hours, and it is said upon being refused, flashed upon the general a message, said to be from the authorities at Washington and couched in most forcible terms with the remark that he had been instructed to deliver the message only as a last resort. The text or tenor of of the message was not made public.

The only satisfaction Mr. Long got was that if possible he (Gen. Salazar) would stay the execution.

Imprisoned in Packing House.

In the meantime Fountain had been removed from the jefatura to the packing house, which had been converted into a temporary fortress. It is supposed that the legal execution by firing squad was stayed, but that early Tuesday morning Fountain was led out of the enclosure and induced to try to escape, with the result that he was killed while running in the direction of the hills.

Mexican lad who said he had sees the whole affair, said that some time after daylight. If men came out of the fort and that finally one of them broke and ran. When the runner had got a short distance away, the others began firing at him. The first three shorts missed him, the fourth caught him over the left car as he turned his head, probably to see if he were gaining on his pursuers. The buillet passes through Fountain's head, coming out through fountain's head, coming out across the plass and toward the store of the Parral Drug company, apparently without guard. He said he believed he was "in for it." meaning that his captors intended killing him and ventured the opinion that the object of giving him the apparent recedom of the city was to induce him to attempt to see any that they might implore the "ley fuga" (law of flight) and kill him as he fied.

Editor El Paso Herald: We are informed that recently you printed in your paper the Frederic Haskin letter describing the work of the National Geographic society. This letter was most favorably received by our many members in your vicinity, and we would like very much to have a copy of that issue for our files, if consistent with your custom. In passing, permit me to say that on a number of occusions we have investigated the facts set forth in the Haskin letters along geographical lines to determine their authenticity, knowing that his articles are very widely read, and I have pleasure in saying that we invariably found them correct in every detail and written in a comprehensive manner that stimulated an interest in travel and general conditions.

John O. La Gorce. Assistant Editor Nat. Geographic Society.
